New Library Director Named

McIntyre Library is proud to announce that interim director, Jill Markgraf, has been hired as the new library director. She will serve as the first female leader of McIntyre Library since Erna Buchholz, the head librarian from 1930-1962. Jill has been working in libraries since graduating from the library and information studies master's program at the University of Wisconsin-Madison and has been at McIntyre since 1998. Although she has spent most of her career in public services, she began in cataloging, and for the last ten years served in management positions in McIntyre Library. Jill and her husband Karl divide their time between Eau Claire and Duluth, and you will often see them at various theater productions and campus events. Please take a moment to stop by her office, Library 3005, and welcome her to this new position. Congratulations, Jill! ■

McIntyre's mission is to foster learning.

We do it by providing access to the written word, by providing spaces where students can work and study collaboratively, by creating a makerspace where students can create and be part of a maker community (later in this issue), and we do it by providing a showcase for student art. Sometimes learning means interacting with art, and sometimes it means observing how people interact with your art.

Enter Renee Ewer, a senior with a double major in art and creative writing. For the last year, visitors to McIntyre Library have encountered and interacted with her art. Her sculpture, In Media Inspirante, placed near the library's entrance, captivates library visitors, who walk around it, bend down to get a closer look at the detailed figures, and ponder her artist statement, which draws a connection between her two majors. The sculpture represents "the initial creation of a story. Before telling the story, the author must first create characters to inhabit it. As the character creation develops, the presence of the author fades away to allow the characters to shine."

Another of Ewer's works, a usable chair fashioned as a "fanciful tree stump" in the library's lower level, incorporates a foliage-covered journal in which visitors can leave messages and drawings. This sculpture was one of three created by students in assistant professor Cedar Marie's spring 2017 Art 264 class in which students created site-specific artworks.

In a recent discussion with Ewer, I asked how she got interested in sculpting, and she said, "I was given polymer clay in first grade, which my parents probably regret, because it's taking over the house." Currently, Ewer is working on miniatures inspired by the art, theatre, and music students in Haas Fine Arts. She envisions a work that expresses a behind-the-scenes narrative where "students are all stressing and everything is half-finished."

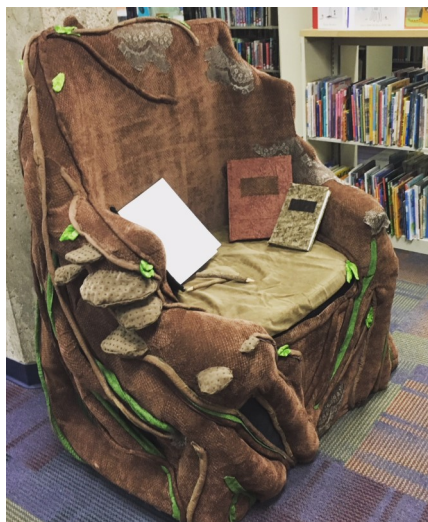

Ewer's work illustrates the inspiration students draw from one another, and it is this magical intersection and interplay of ideas that McIntyre Library strives to ignite. To celebrate and honor the work of our student artists, McIntyre Library is building a fund to purchase and display more student art on a permanent basis. Contributions to this fund can be made at <http://bit.ly/art-in-the-library>.

Stop in and be inspired. ■

New in Special Collections:

The LaBelle Miller Southwest Pottery Collection

By Greg Kocken, kockeng@uwec.edu

The idea of a Southwest pottery collection may seem farfetched for the library's special collections and archives department. After all, Eau Claire is a thousand miles from the American Southwest. Despite this distance, our institution is the perfect home for this unique collection.

The collection, which arrived last October, supports multi-discipline learning opportunities and should not be defined by any geographic boundary. University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire's emphasis on liberal arts education, with strong programs in history; art & design; American Indian studies; women's, gender, and sexuality studies; geography and anthropology; and more, make our institution the perfect home for this unique collection.

The LaBelle Miller Southwest Pottery Collection contains nearly 400 pieces of pottery. Native artists, often using traditional techniques dating back hundreds of years, created all of the pieces in the collection. It is impressive in both its scope and scale. Pieces from over a dozen nations, including many of the Pueblo nations, are included.

They range in scale from small pieces that fit in the palm of a hand to others standing over two feet in height. Every piece features a unique design that is associated with the nation of the artist. While many pieces are contemporary, created in the last 40 years, there are still many examples of early and mid-20th century pieces in the collection. Viewers can study the evolution of individual artists and styles over time because of the impressive breadth of the collection.

Several classes have already engaged with the collection this semester. In the years ahead, we anticipate carefully preparing every piece for archival storage and display. This will improve our ability to provide access to pieces in the collection and support our efforts to preserve the collection for many future generations. We also plan to create a comprehensive guide to the collection, including an image of every piece, and make that guide available online. If you are interested in viewing pieces from the collection, or would like to discuss how your class could engage with this collection, please contact the special collections and archives department. ■

The collection contains nearly a dozen pieces from contemporary Kewa Pueblo artist Thomas Tenorio. Kewa pottery is noted for its contrasting cream and black designs, often featuring figures, such as the fish, seen in this piece. UHC362.00263

CHECK IT OUT!

New technology added at McIntyre's equipment checkout

This academic year, equipment checkout has added a variety of new and exciting technology resources to help students make the most of their projects.

The largest new addition to equipment checkout is the podcasting room. Located on the third floor of the library, the podcasting room is a space designated for recording studio quality audio for podcasts, interviews, video projects, and more. Library staff have worked with Blugold Radio to select the necessary sound mixing and recording equipment, as well as sound-dampening fixtures to minimize background noise for an optimal recording experience. The room can be checked out for two hours at a time and can also be scheduled ahead of time by contacting Erin Kriener, equipment checkout supervisor (715-836-5383).

Zoom H4N Pro Handy Recorder

Another addition is a number of Zoom H4N Pro Handy audio recorders. These versatile recorders are capable of recording higher quality audio out in the field beyond that of standard audio recorders or cell phone apps. An accessory kit is also available containing lavalier microphones and accessories to utilize the Zoom H4N as a microphone for recording with DSLR cameras for optimum video recording results. Equipment checkout continuously strives to find and add new resources that will benefit students in their pursuit of making great work. For more information on all of the new equipment or other items already in the checkout pool, please check out our website (<https://www.uwec.edu/Library/reserve/laptop.htm>), or contact staff at the circulation desk. ■

Snowball iCE Microphones

Record high quality audio on your computer with these easy-to-use USB microphones, no additional software or hardware installations necessary.

Phone Tripod Adapter

Take pictures or videos on your phone with the added stabilization of any full-size or mini tripod using these adapter pieces.

Solar Chargers

Charge mobile devices (phones and tablets) while studying outdoors with these solar panel chargers.

The Microprocessing Kit

Experiment with electronics with this kit that contains the components of Arduino and Raspberry Pi starter kits.

COMING THIS FALL: MCINTYRE LIBRARY MAKERSPACE

a place where people get together to make things

You can look forward to a range of tools, from 3D printers and 3D scanners to sewing machines and vinyl cutters. Soldering irons, power tools, and Lego blocks will share shelf space with tools you would expect to find in any garage. Are you concerned that you don't know how to use the tools? No problem! We plan on having all the expertise and training you need to accomplish your projects. Watch the McIntyre Library webpage and social media for more details. Also, be on the lookout as we will be soliciting ideas of what to name the makerspace. Faculty, staff, and students who want to collaborate, get involved, or just stay updated, should contact Dan Hillis (hillisdr@uwec.edu). He can also connect students with a newly formed student group MakeUWEC. Spread the word! ■

One Book, One Community: local libraries team up for reading program featuring Hillbilly Elegy

By Eric Jennings, jenninge@uwec.edu

McIntyre Library and the L.E. Phillips Memorial Public Library have teamed up to host a reading program titled "One Book, One Community." This program will feature a handful of events in which participants will read and discuss J.D. Vance's Hillbilly Elegy.

University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire faculty, staff, and students are invited to read the book and join the discussion on campus on April 9 at noon in the Center for Excellence in Teaching and Learning (CETL) located in Old Library 1142. Additional programs will be held throughout the week at the Eau Claire public library.

About the Program

One Book, One Community is a reading program designed to encourage literacy and civic involvement by reading a single book which highlights issues relevant to our community. This collaboration is for all members of the UW-Eau Claire (students, faculty, staff) and the greater Eau Claire community.

About the Book

Hillbilly Elegy by J.D. Vance is a memoir about the Appalachian values of Vance's upbringing and their relation to the social problems of his hometown. The author reflects on upward mobility in America seen through the lens of a white, working-class family.

The book has received high praise from a variety of sources. This #1 New York Times bestseller was listed as one of six books to help understand President Trump's election. The Economist said "You will not read a more important book about America this year." Christianity Today remarked "The troubles of the working poor are well known to policymakers, but Vance offers an insider's view of the problem." ■

Student Employee Scholarship Recipient: Elizabeth Rusch

By Jenna Vande Zande, vandezjl@uwec.edu

This fall we awarded our third annual $250 McIntyre Library Student Employee Scholarship. This scholarship is available to all student employees in the library. The 2017 winner was sophomore circulation student Elizabeth Rusch, who received her award at the annual student appreciation party in December. Rusch joined the McIntyre team at the beginning of her freshman year and stated that “working at the library has enhanced my college experience in so many ways.”

In her application essay, Rusch recounted stories of the friends she has made while working at McIntyre Library, including how she and some of her fellow coworkers ran in the Eau Claire Marathon together last spring. She also discussed how working in the library allows her to maintain a better school, life, and work balance and that the library acts as “a place of peace.” Besides the positive impact on her academic life and introducing her to lifelong friends, working in the library has also helped shape her future goals. One day while shelving in the stacks, Rusch came across a book called The Promise of a Pencil by Adam Braun. The book recounts the story of Braun beginning his non-profit organization, Pencils of Promise. After looking through the book, Rusch realized that the idea of working for a non-profit really inspired her. She started looking into non-profit work, including how she could start one of her own. “Finding this book completely changed the way that I look at my future, and it all started when I was just shelving a cart [of books].” ■

NOTE: Danielle Schroeder, the first recipient of the student employee scholarship, is in the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee's master of library and information science program and is planning to graduate in May of next year. She recently interviewed for an adult services librarian position at Berlin Public Library and let us know that she was offered and has accepted the job, and started a few weeks ago. Congratulations, Danielle!

While the experience gained working in McIntyre Library helps prepare students for many different careers, we are happy to help financially with this scholarship. When you plan your charitable contributions this year, please consider donating to our scholarship fund. You can make a donation online at <https://connect.uwec.edu/library> and select Student Employee Scholarship from the drop down menu. ■
